The true meaning of the idea behind the app is in the name itself. And indeed, the program is designed to help learn English in a way that words are understood with the help of pictures, just as kids enjoy comic books and cartoons. Teaches English words and sentences using pictures Being aimed at learners who are just starting to figure out what English sounds like, the program bets on their visual memory since it prompts them with a series of images they get to associate with specific words or sentences. The software utility covers a multitude of topics ranging from the alphabet, the body, colors, and days, to music, pets, shapes, transport, vegetables, the weather, and many others, all of which can be accessed from the main window. Helps beginners learn and test their vocabulary Once you select the one you are interested in, various images are displayed, and at mouse hover, you get to hear a word or sentence about the object or the activity taking place in it. Naturally, these are simple phrases, such as "That's an eraser" or "That's a dolphin." What's more, a small box is displayed as well so that you can associate the pronunciation of the word you are learning with a specific spelling. Aside from this word-learning module, there is also the one teaching sentences such as "The monkey's got a long tail." We won't argue here this approach to teaching English, but in our opinion, this is rather old-fashion and might not encourage fast and natural learning. Lets you keep an eye on your progress Last but not least, a quiz is also integrated so that you can put your language skills to the test. In any case, what is great is that the program comes with instructions in 5 different languages and that keeping track of your progress is possible with the help of reports that can be printed in the blink of an eye.
