The process in the Hollywood of how "Vice" was made is a real love story, and once you read it, you feel like you've been inside it, too. The film spans the period between 1830s and present day, the last four years of which were spent shooting (largely) on a beach in Puerto Rico (no, seriously). This is basically the story of an American-Polish family in terms of culture and history, and what we see unfolding in the film is an effort to recreate them. This matters, because the story of the last century of America is one of a descent into racism, sexism, militarism, capitalism, imperialism, and now also nihilism. Despite all the slights and insults, the family is proud, and their own histories -- and their founding patriarch's own life -- are the thing they stand on. This is what "Vice" is trying to get at, and it's clear why Caryn James and Godfrey Reggio chose to work with the Gorks. Both had been in the news recently for the right reasons, and the question asked by critics was if the film would address the cruelty of the Bush Administration in the face of Hurricane Katrina. Not really. In fact, it should be required viewing for anyone who thinks only one person in this country should be holding the power. Matthew McConaughey plays Frank Tilton, and the film is about the kind of man he would be if he'd lived to be 100. He takes no bullshit, treats people fairly, and he's not afraid of work. It's the fall of the family that changes him. This is the important part of the story, because Frank sees his family through a camera lens in the years leading up to the passing of his father, who'd been a big part of raising the children. What's behind the camera, the journalist-in-training sees by the time he's 21, but it's hard to ignore when he's watching the footage. Frank wasn't the spoiled, rich boy that he wants people to believe he is. It's his mother (Ann Dowd) who gives him the education he needs, and she becomes his first real love. She's responsible for the erosion of the family as a unit, as Frank has four siblings. His older brother Pete (Peter Sarsgaard) is a temperamental hippie who just can't hold on to a job. His sister Gwyn (Elizabeth Olsen) prefers to be with the more "enlight
