big hit in their fields. One, who declined to be named, said the platform was “the No. 1 sales aid in the pharma space” in 2011. “Of course,” he added, “there are competitors with regard to sales, but Blackboard is a service that allows sales reps to be out in the field.” The company’s sales agents, meanwhile, increasingly find themselves juggling the two major sales platforms, Facebook and LinkedIn, depending on the industry or the client they are pitching. It’s a recipe for confusion at the office, according to employee assessments. There’s “too much, too often,” said a LinkedIn sales agent, who asked to remain anonymous. “I’m getting messages from Blackboard saying, ‘We’re at the finish line, email them back to let them know you’re here.’” She tried to reach out to whoever is in charge of sales but found herself unable to get any response. “Now, we’re on [Blackboard] going, ‘Oh, we don’t have time to look at this.’ Or, ‘We’re not in the office right
