SMU's alums are rallying in Houston to raise money for victims of Hurricane Harvey. PHOTO: STEVE SCHAEFER A group of the Dallas Cowboys' greatest players are holding a golf tournament to benefit flood victims in Houston, The Dallas Morning News reported Wednesday. The first phase will include former Cowboys offensive linemen Rayfield Wright, Will Herring and Mike Hart. And just in case the players get a little too tight during the tournament, former stars like Tony Romo and Tommie Harris will be providing "handgrips" for the game. What makes the alumni tournament so fun for the players is the chance to rub shoulders with some of their favorite stars from their high school football careers. "Most kids when they walk into the locker room, they make eye contact with the team," former Cowboys fullback Tommie Harris said. "They made eye contact with those guys. It's just history. It's like a reunion. A lot of those guys are still around. I think this will be fun." The Dallas alumni players have been golfing together for years. They play for charities like Special Olympics and the Dallas Cowboys Alumni Association, but this will be their first fundraiser for Harvey relief. "We've played it a million times," former safety Erik Williams said. "A lot of different places, different times, we've done it." Harris added that the charity event provides a good opportunity for the players to give back to their community. "We need to do something here," Harris said. "This is a great opportunity for us to come in, to give back, to help out the people and give back to the community." Getty Images Before the NFL players' union filed its petition for an injunction to prevent the league from imposing a policy of giving players the choice between staying in camp or going to jail for being late, the union's filing attempted to frame the issue differently. The filing contended that the policy, which becomes effective in four weeks unless the union wins its petition, is actually a disciplinary action because players who are late pay fines and have the option of missing practice. Petitioner Robert Mays filed a motion to dismiss that contention, and the NFL filed a motion asking the court to deny the petition. Earlier this year, a U.S. district
