To analyze the factors associated with the use of blood transfusion (BT) by patients with chronic kidney disease (CKD) using a case-control design in a public hospital in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The analysis included patients over 15 years old with CKD who received BT between the years 2008 and 2015. A survey of the patients was conducted in 50 hospitals of the metropolitan area of Rio de Janeiro. Cases (patients who had used BT) and controls (patients who had not used BT) were matched according to age. Relative risk (RR) and respective 95% confidence intervals (95%CI) were calculated using unconditional logistic regression to identify factors associated with BT use. Of the 1408 patients included in the study, 584 (41%) had used BT. The following factors were associated with an increased risk for BT: older age (65-84 years) (RR=1.9; 95%CI: 1.4-2.6), female gender (RR=1.3; 95%CI: 1.1-1.7), race (black or brown) (RR=1.3; 95%CI: 1.0-1.8), hospitalization (RR=3.1; 95%CI: 2.3-4.3), and diagnosis of arterial hypertension (RR=2.3; 95%CI: 1.6-3.3), diabetes mellitus (RR=3.7; 95%CI: 2.2-6.4), chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (RR=2.2; 95%CI: 1.3-3.7), heart failure (RR=2.1; 95%CI: 1

I am using react native link to export to Android and iOS. I have been able to export a single image to both and have been asked to do the same for multiple images. I have been able to generate two packages and then run react-native link but when I tried react-native link with no additional arguments it does not recognize the files. What I am trying to do is generate two assets, that I am not writing and using my asset directory that share the same name. A: If you're using react-native link 2.1 or greater, you'll want to use the replace-in-link-name parameter. This is because the link-names argument was deprecated. Example: react-native link configurator:linkname my_project.a You'll want to run this step for each package you have, even if they have the same package name and only change the link name. When Ms Hutchinson-Keijser first began her studies in 1998, she decided to specialise in engaging the mentally ill in mental health promotion. “I wanted to understand why people take drugs. Why do people go to overdose services? What are the things that are supposed to trigger them to do these things, and how can we get people to do them the right way?” she told AAP. Ms Hutchinson-Keijser spent her first year at the University of Melbourne studying mental health promotion, and during her second year she decided to work with people with a mental illness. In the following years, Ms Hutchinson-Keijser found the support from her supervisor, Dr Paul Panizzutti, invaluable. “He really made me think that I should engage with people in a more meaningful way,” she said. So as she pursued her PhD, she decided to focus on empowerment. “One thing that came through my research for my PhD was that there was this myth around mental health that people weren’t supposed to have any knowledge or power,” Ms Hutchinson-Keijser said. “That the whole point of their treatment was to change how they thought and live. I thought that wasn't the point of mental health. That if you change a person's thinking you change their behaviour. That's not the case. "You can change someone's behaviour by helping them to realise and develop their own strengths, their own dignity. That's when their self-efficacy comes to life. That was the idea that changed my work." Ms Hutchinson-Keijser spent her first year of her PhD looking at how we can empower mentally ill patients. Then, as she started approaching the conclusion of the project, it occurred to her that she should ask the question of how she should
