This game is suitable for ages 10 and up, depending on the player's maturity level. While blindsight is still under development, I have come up with a few ideas about improving the game further. This game has been the result of my teenage bedroom games becoming boring and I took it out of the house. I would greatly appreciate any constructive criticism you may have, suggestions or just a friendly word of encouragement.

Q: Flex 4.5: How to remove domain and port of browser? I have a web app that will run on two different domains: one domain is "localhost", it's the local web server. the second is "www.domain.com", a third party web server. How can I remove the two domains when users run the app in their browser? Can I remove it from the browser header or can I change the URL into "localhost:8090" or "localhost:8082"? A: This will do it: That's why I don't like Adobe's naming: it's internally very complex. A: You can do this: `import flash.net.navigateToURL; function getURL():void { myURL = flash.net.navigateToURL(new URLRequest(myURL), "_blank"); } Now, each time you want to navigate to a website, you can do it like this: getURL(); Make sure to return the value from getURL() and not use it as a parameter or the flash.net.navigateToURL() method will fail.` A phenotypic marker of a common osteoarthritic phenotype in

"Dive" is a platformer where you play as a diver with the ability to raise and lower water (no I do not play underwater because, "Dive" does not work as an underwater game) to avoid the many hazards that will keep you from making it back to the surface. The game has 11 stages, and 2 unique ending scenes. Dive has no text, no menu screen, or HUD. This is due to my own personal preference of a low tech approach to gaming. No graphics, no text, no menu screen. Rather than text or a graphics heavy menu screen, "Dive" uses information provided by the player in the form of cursor movements, which, in the end, make more sense. Controls Up - raises the pillar Down - lowers the pillar Left and Right - turn and move the cursor. Keys - 'A' button will raise the pillar, 'B' will lower it, and enter will do a 'jump' to the next pillar. Collisions- You can only raise or lower a pillar of water where a pillar is. Collisions are guaranteed to only take you to a lower pillar of water. You will lose points for each pillar you pass through, and the amount of points will increase as the pillar get higher. So, the more pillars you pass through, the better you will do. It is a matter of persistence, and patience. I chose to leave no extra room for death. If you fail, you will only lose points, not lose them all. There will be a prompt for you to press 'A' to continue, or, you can fail out, and you will only lose the amount of points you have left. The ending scene takes you to the top of the screen. Any further upward progress will be optional. The goal of the ending scene is to help you take a better chance at the last level to have a higher chance of success. Good Luck. The music: I created the music for Dive. I have included both a linear and a progressive approach to music. Dive starts with the linear approach, then changes to the progressive approach in the second stage. The linear approach is a simple jazz song, that has only one accompaniment. The progressive approach is a jazz song that will have its accompaniment change as you go along. The songs will, however, remain constant in tempo.

We do not own the text and graphics used in this group, We take no credit for them, We just use them to spread the love of The magical girl, Supernatural, Horror and Folk againts the vampire... A Tale of Mistakes, Fate & Friendship. (not the wand part, we do not own that...well we took it, but it was just borrowing it for the others, we did not mean to) A Tale of Mistakes, Fate & Friendship: Alice felt the shift more than anything. It was an uneasy feeling like floating head down in a sea of fog, feeling the breeze tickle her cheek, only to always find her submerged deep beneath. She was afraid to take a look, no matter what, she was still trapped. At least she could still hear, nothing was being sucked in any holes in her. Her friends would certainly notice if she started to turn into vampire. It hadn't happened during their little 'vacation', but to be totally honest, neither of them had paid much attention. They had gotten drunk, argued and made out well the night before and it had all been strictly a giggle for them. Shawn was the last to crawl out of his bed. Happy Birthday, Alice said as she gave him a hand up. You're 30. We should celebrate. "Ok, first question, What's for breakfast?" Shawn rubbed his eyes and asked. "What's there to eat?" "Well they bought a fresh pig, I think there is eggs and cooking things or something?" "Oh ok." "Precisely. Well In the breakfast bowls?" "Ummm, I'll check." Alice hopped down from the kitchen table where they had spent the night and walked to the hanging fridge, as she opened it she gagged slightly at the smell and stood perfectly still not moving a muscle. She closed the door hard and walked over to Shawn. "What's wrong?" "The smell, I think it's coming from your cup." Shawn looked at the cup and frowned. It had been there all night. Nobody had spilled anything in it. He lifted the lid to check and confirmed what Alice had suspected
