Although it should come as no great surprise to anybody who's following this election, Donald Trump is generally expected to win the presidency because the Electoral College votes that would enable him to do so. There are a few factors that can limit his victory in the actual vote, which will be held on November 8th. Here are three of them. 1) The Coming Two-Way Race Poll after poll has shown Hillary Clinton to be the better candidate. However, the truth is that Trump is very good at the public speaking and campaigning, so he could very well close the gap with Clinton over the next two months. The simple fact is that the race will be very close. Even if Clinton gets the most votes, there's a large chance that the Electoral College will tip the scales in Trump's favor. 2) The Clinton Foundation When you compare the activities of Donald Trump to Hillary Clinton, it becomes very clear that Hillary Clinton is the better candidate. However, if Donald Trump actually does win, the first thing that will look into will be Trump's relationship with his foundation. If the FBI discovers any illegal activities, and there are many questionable activities, then it could be the thing that puts him in jail. 3) The Electoral College Hillary Clinton has the lead in the popular vote. However, if the Electoral College went against her, the race would be over. Although Trump has dominated states in the Great Plains, it may not be enough to compensate for other states that support Clinton. The key to this is not so much with the states themselves, but with the power of the First-Amendment-loving Democratic electors. There are many of them, and it is possible that they could stop Trump's Electoral College landslide. [click on image for enlarge]
