by "japan's new laws are passed", i assume you mean the new age of consent is being raised to 14? if so, it's been raised in the us for a while, and i can confirm that it makes a big difference. it's not necessarily a "good thing", but not all the time is it a "bad thing". the japanese culture has been there since the time of the samurai warriors and many people see this as something that goes beyond what we consider to be "normal". i agree with you that it is very difficult to change, but that's the whole point of living in a free world. maybe if people started speaking up and told their kids not to be afraid of "freaky things" they would actually learn that being nude is normal and nothing to be ashamed of. the problem is that people don't speak up, they just learn to be ashamed about this. i have been to your neighborhood in japan and we have a communal bath in the neighborhood just like you do. it's not a big difference in the communal part from what you mentioned, but i'll take a look in our public bath in the japan and let you know the difference. it's not like that in the us. in the us, the communal part is a big part of the bathhouse. i travel to onsen about 3x a year. i can honestly say that there is no better place in the world to relax, cool off and feel refreshed. most of the places i've been at are private establishments owned by locals. however, there are also a few places like the one in snowmass that are part of larger chain hotels. i've been to the one in aspen before, and it was great! however, i don't think i'd like it as much if i were staying at a chain hotel, because it seems like there is only one kind of people there. it might also be possible that there are less people there to watch you, but i'm really not too sure. it's my opinion, just an opinion, but for sure you can get the best relaxation experience you will ever have at a japanese onsen.
