The invention has particular application to solid state electronic devices, such as the type for converting an input voltage into an output voltage, and will be described herein in connection with this application. Examples of such devices include the thermionic vacuum rectifier, the pn-diode, the thyristor and the transistor. In the present application, these devices will be referred to as vacuum diodes and vacuum triodes. The efficiency of a vacuum diode generally is related to the work function of the cathode material. In a conventional vacuum diode, generally the cathode is made of a metal having a high work function, such as tungsten. Sec8ef588b
