Gawker/Techdirt posting of password reset links is a vast national security threat, and that's what the TSA is trying to make you think. See, the whole reason that the TSA exists is that the government wants to be able to track people around the United States without their consent. That's why there are all those weird TSA proposals to do more with your cellphone data and turn airport backscatter x-ray systems into mobile surveillance tools. That's why the government keeps calling for expanded drone surveillance programs. That's why the government wants the government to be able to take your phone records without a warrant. So when a guy on the street happens to send me a password reset link via email, a courier or a text mjPasswordVault is a free utility designed to be a better way to remember your passwords and other information than to keep track of them in a written or program file. There are many ways to store passwords and other data. The easiest to remember is a paper file, but to protect that file, you need to type them in the clear when you need them. This can be dangerous when you need to use a password on a computer. If a person were to hack into your computer and steal your password file, he could gain access to your account. mjPasswordVault will save your passwords and user id's into a password protected datafile. Unlike traditional password stores, your passwords are not stored in the clear in your mjPasswordVault file. Your password and network id's are encrypted and saved in the file, but when you login to your program, your password will pop up on screen and you can type it into the program. It will remember the name of the datafile you want to save your passwords and user id's in, but it will not remember the location of it. You can create as many datafiles as you want, one for each password and user id. They can be all stored in the same folder, or they can be stored in a separate folder, or even on a flash drive. It is up to you. The ability to quickly copy your datafile contents to the clipboard is very convenient, especially if you are not a computer savvy person.

mjPasswordVault will save the registration code, serial number, and website name for your software in one datafile. For example, you can store your software registration code as well as the URL to where you purchased your product in one easy to remember location. This makes it much easier to fill out forms when you need to purchase more software. As mentioned earlier, mjPasswordVault will create a good, strong, hard to guess password for you. It will save this password on a separate entry in your datafile so you will not have to remember it. After you are finished, the only way to get back to your saved datafile contents is to use the search function. This allows you to find exactly the information you need, and once you are done searching, you can copy and paste it into your application, website or whatever you need it for. I think this product is a must for everyone. Self-assembled alginate/PLLA microcapsules for the controlled release of poly
