With today’s increasing complexity, deadlines and scope of each project, content creation has become increasingly difficult. It used to be that many individuals would create the majority of a content plan for a project from scratch. Then came the Internet which melded the word together; and, a plethora of mobile technology—all too often at the expense of the content. In turn, it has made the process of publishing content easier on an individual rather than the traditional publishing model. In fact, mobile photos often aren’t even really photos, but rather a sequence of images chased together into what looks like a short film. This is at least how it feels when you’re spending hours trying to get a beautiful shot, only to send it to family and friends and ask them what they think. This is where Photoshop Camera can make all the difference. Imagine being able
